

Digital Solidarity (Post-Media Lab)

Felix Stalder's extended essay, Digital Solidarity, takes its point of departure from the waves of new forms of networked political organisation which have met the onset of the global economic crisis of 2008. Following Karl Marx, Stalder lays out how in the current period there are emergent contradictions between applied innovation and technical progress and the economic institutions which organise or restrain this progress. The contradictions between forces of production and relations of production are placed in a context in which we have left McLuhans Gutenberg Galaxy behind for good and the struggles over where we will arrive are only just beginning.
