

WEST AFRICA - Angler Walkabout Series Book 5

Book 5 in the Angler Walkabout Series sees Julian Wicksteed return to Africa ten years after travels there for his first book, A Catch on Africa. Travelling for five months along the coast from Senegal to Cameroon, West Africa, however, proves to be a whole different kettle of fish. With severe civil war ransacking the region in recent decades, not only is almost half of the worlds top 10 poorest nations located there, it also proves to offer a smorgasbord of opportunity for over exploitation by non-African entities. Not to mention the fact that the worlds worst ever Ebola epidemic is looming just around the corner.

At times the travel, fishing and surfing poses almost insurmountable difficulties during this book, but still the author manages to uncover some diamonds in the rough. During his Walkabout: The author travels through eleven different countries. Enters Liberia with the Ebola death toll in West Africa at 36 and rising. Encounters a big brother fish species to Australias mangrove jack and catches some monsters. Experiences some of the most crowded travel conditions hes ever encountered. Catches jack crevalle on the fly rod for the first time and releases a number of them. Gets amongst some isolated surf and learns what its like to surf before a crowd. Finds himself in a vehicle roll over, but comes out on top. And he accidentally eats one of the nicest animals in West Africa.
