

Rosie Are You In There?

This is the story about my son, Michael, an intelligent, enthusiastic boy who was well liked by his peers and adored by his family. Michael developed a pineal gland germinoma brain tumor at the age of 17. It is the story of his deterioration, and the frustration of dealing with some of the medical community and hospitals. Michael was not treated as a young person but sometimes like he was a 101. He was callously told how bleak his future was and that he had no chance to do the things he loved. We need an optimistic health system, open to others opinions and honest enough to recommend another way or another expert who, in some cases, can do it better. We need doctors and hospitals to be less egotistical and more holistic and humanistic.
