Not illustrated. 1817 Excerpt: ...to afford more relief in asthmatic cases than the root; and this, I believe very probable, for they are remarkably active, pungent, and, as has before been mentioned, exhale the odour of assafcetida. Thatchers Disp../ The bruised leaves are frequently applied to ulcers and recent wounds, and it is said, with good effect. They are also used as an external application, in cutaneous affections; and I have heard of the expressed juice being successfully applied to different species of herpes. The leaves are used in the country to dress blisters, with the view of promoting their discharge. For this purpose they are slightly bruised, by being laid on a flat board, and having a rollingpin passed a few times over them. This is necessary to reduce the projecting middle rib, nerves, and veins, so as to enable every part of the leaf to come in contact with the surface of the blister. Colden recommends the Skunk-cabbage in scurvy, as well as in all other diseases in which the officinal wake-robin (Arum maculatum), has been found useful. I have had a good deal of experience in this disease; and though I have never used the subject of this article in the treatment of it, I have no hesitation in declaring my disbelief of its usefulness in this distressing complaint. I have not had any experience with this plant for medical purposes, except with the leaves as above-mentioned, to dress blisters. For this purpose I can recommend them, where it is desirable to promote a large and speedy discharge, and no stimulating ointment is at hand. But it is only on the authority of those whom I have quoted, that I invite the notice of physicians to the plant, in the treatment of consumptive cough, asthma, and hysteria. In the latter complaints, its antispasmodic virtues seem to p...
